CARIBBEAN STATISTICS – HOW DEVELOPED ARE WE?

There has been a recent surge in interest in “statistics” in recent times. The first International Day of Statistics was celebrated by the UN on 20th October 2010. This was done to highlight the need for individuals to be aware of the need for statistics and statisticians. The amount of data being produced by countries and organizations has instigated the need to show others the impact that statistics is having on society, including all branches of science, industry, public health and public policy. It is not surprising then that the year 2013 is being marked as the International Year of Statistics.

R. Wasserman1 (2013) cites five reasons for the surge in interest in statistics:

1. The advent of “Big Data” and the resulting demand for employees with analytical and quantitative skills by government and private employers.
2. Increased interest in undergraduate and graduate statistics programme in the US and abroad.
3. The rise in stardom of FiveThirtyEight.com blogger and statistician Nate Silver.
4. The growth of sports analytics that was captured in the 2011 movie Moneyball.
5. The International Year of Statistics, currently being celebrated worldwide.

The founding organizations of the International Year of Statistics—also called Statistics2013—are the American Statistical Association, the Institute of Mathematical Statistics, the International Biometric Society, International Statistical Institute (and the Bernoulli Society), and the Royal Statistical Society. As the established by the founding organizations, the campaign’s primary objectives are to do the following:

- Increase public awareness of the power and impact of statistics on all aspects of society
- Nurture statistics as a profession, especially among young people
- Promote creativity and development in the sciences of probability and statistics

Statistics2013 participating organizations include national and international professional statistical societies, colleges and universities, primary and secondary schools, businesses, government statistical agencies, and research institutes. These organizations are located in 121 countries spanning the world. Statistics help us to understand the world. Good statistics provide confidence and legitimacy for decisions, programme and treatments, (L. Aronson, Dec 2012). Statistics have powerful and far-reaching effects on everyone, yet most people are unaware of their connection—from the foods they eat to the medicines they take—and how statistics improve their lives.

On 6th March 2013, CARICOM joined with the world in celebrating the International Year of Statistics, with its official campaign launch; they expect that the observance of International Year of Statistics would garner greater profile for statistics across CARICOM. The CARICOM Secretariat, through its regional statistics programme, is collaborating with member states of CARICOM to observe the IYOS 2013 under the theme “Statistics in Everyday Life; Let us Educate and Appreciate”. Educating all stakeholders about statistics will be the general thrust of activities to observe the year. CARICOM Secretariat’s public awareness programme will have at its core a focus on the region’s youth. Other areas in statistics will pivot around that core youth focus and will dovetail with activities to observe the 40th Anniversary of the Caribbean Community.

Inadequate statistics has always been a major limitation to studies done on Caribbean economies. The Caribbean region has often been described as “data poor”. There are many perspectives at which this problem can be and have been approached, from the organization of the statistical offices, to the issue of training and the issue of budgetary resources. Organisations such as— the European Economic Commission, the Inter-American Development Bank, the Caribbean Development Bank, the United Kingdom Department for International Development, the United Nations Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (UNECLAC), United Nations Population Fund and other agencies within the UN system, and the Canadi-

6. In order to accomplish all of the above it is urgent that countries be provided with the necessary equipment, including modern access to the internet, computer hardware and software and training in the use and maintenance of these equipment.

7. In order to maximize the benefits to country donor agencies and partners in statistical development of the Caribbean, they should assist in the identification of viable mechanisms and frameworks for genuine collaboration and cooperation in delivering the inputs that are essential for rapid and sustainable statistical development of the sub-region.

Statistics2013 has given the Caribbean region another avenue to promote and highlight the need for statistical offices of the various countries to find ways to enable them to “…find mechanism that can take us forward in this century and beyond, such as identifying Best Practices and Centers of Excellence; engaging with schools/universities on the teaching of mathematics and statistics and supporting the modernization of statistical agencies…” (P. Harrison2, March 2013). CARICOM countries have embraced this worldwide event as many of them have planned events throughout the year to celebrate Statistics2013. Visit http://caricomstats.org/ivos2013.htm for the events.

But how developed have the statistical services in the Caribbean region really become? A UNECLAC report entitled “A study on the capacity of Statistical Offices of the Caribbean to produce environment, social, economic and gender statistics.” (May 2012) highlights the fact that Caribbean countries continue to struggle in enhancing their statistical capacities. In the area of economic statistics notable progress has been made but significant gaps exist in all other areas of statistics. There is a great need for the statistical offices to improve and enhance the compilation of social and environmental statistics, especially for assessing progress of the countries in achieving the MDGs target of 2015. Emphasizing that Caribbean economies face increased demands for evidence-based policies and decisions and these can only be addressed through accurate, relevant, and timely statistical data of a very broad scope. The UNECLAC report made the following recommendations:

1. Evidence-based policies and decisions are crucially dependent on reliable and timely statistical data which the survey shows are noticeably lacking in the Caribbean. Both the governments of the Caribbean and the regional development partners therefore need to urgently find ways to address this serious situation.

2. The survey also showed that the training of staff at statistical agencies is the most urgent need expressed by all countries in all areas assessed. All partners, inclusive of the governments and donor agencies, should therefore re-think, re-plan and re-programme much more support to statistical agencies.

3. Formal training arms of existing academic institutions operating in the Caribbean should immediately introduce appropriate training that will rapidly address the most urgent needs of the statistical organizations of the sub-region.

4. The approach to statistical development in the Caribbean should involve both the users and the producers of statistics and should encourage and enhance a ‘culture’ of statistics among all segments of the population.

5. The presence of this culture should be expressed by ensuring that the appropriate statistical environment is established in all government ministries and private sector entities.

Celebrating Caribbean Statistician– Jack Harewood

On the occasion of the International Year of Statistics 2013, CCMF will be highlighting the work of statisticians who have contributed significantly to the development of Caribbean statistics.

Jack Harewood was born in San Fernando, Trinidad. He was educated at the London School of Economics between 1949 and 1952, where he gained his BSc in Economics. His special subject was Statistics, including Social Statistics and Demography. His postgraduate work included three months of training in sampling at Rothamstead Experimental Station in England, and a six-month period of special work in demography at Chicago University.

Upon returning home, Mr. Harewood served as Assistant Government Statistician for Trinidad and Tobago during the 1957-1968 period and Associate Director, Census Research Programme at the University of the West Indies during the 1968-1970 period. He was appointed to the post of Associate Director of ISER, St. Augustine in 1970. Mr. Jack Harewood had travelled widely and several occasions attended prestigious conferences such as the World Population Conference in Belgrade and those convened by the International Statistical Institute and the International Union for the Scientific Study of Population.

During his illustrious and distinguished career he authored a monograph entitled; The Population of Trinidad and Tobago, the CICRED Series, 1975. He was also the author of several other monographs, journal articles and chapters in edited texts. Mr. Harewood was also engaged in a number of technical studies that included directing and writing numerous reports and papers associated with the World Fertility Surveys and the Population and Housing Censuses in the Anglophone Caribbean. He was regarded as Trinidad and Tobago’s leading demographer in the 1960/70’s.
